DETAILED ACTION

Receipt is acknowledged of response filed on October 1, 2004. The finality of the Office action dated July 1, 2004 and the indication of allowability therein are withdrawn upon further consideration. New rejections are made as explained below.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claim 14 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

Claim 14 is a compound claim. However, since average n is required to be 1.7, the claimed subject matter appears to be a mixture of compounds and thus a composition claim. Clearly indicating the subject matter to either a composition or compound selected from a Markush group (e.g., where in n is selected from 1 to 100) is recommended.

The term "derivative" renders the claim vague and indefinite. While applicants appear to claim a mixture or group of specific compounds, the term "derivative" renders the claim vague and indefinite because it is not clear of what compound the claimed invention is derivatized. Deletion of the term "derivative" is recommended.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The text of those sections of Title 35, U.S. Code not included in this action can be found in a prior Office action.

Claim 14 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Robbins et al. US 4626429 ("Robbins").

US 4626429 is an English equivalent of DE 3617307 A, cited in IDS filed March 18, 2004.

Robbins teaches diamides which are structurally similar to the compound shown in claim 14. In the formula shown in col. 6, lines 1-5, when n =2, T is methyl, and R is a neoalkyl of 7 carbon atoms, the claimed compound wherein n=1 is an isomeric compound of the prior art diamide.

A prima facie case of obviousness may be made when chemical compounds have very close structural similarities and similar utilities. "An obviousness rejection based on similarity in chemical structure and function entails the motivation of one skilled in the art to make a claimed compound, in the expectation that compounds similar in structure will have similar properties." In re Payne, 606 F.2d 303, 313, 203 USPQ 245, 254 (CCPA 1979). In this case, the only difference between the prior art and the present compound is that the prior art compound has C7 neoalkyl groups at the R positions wherein the claimed compound has 1-butyl ethyl methyl groups which are related as isomeric forms of each other. The prior art teaches to use the compound for hair care treatment, which is the same utility claimed in the present invention.

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to prepare the instantly claimed compounds because they are isomers of the reference compounds. One having ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to prepare the instantly claimed compounds because such isomeric compounds are suggestive of one another and would be expected to share similar properties and therefore, the same use as taught for the reference compounds, i.e., as hair treatment agent. It has been held that a compound which is structurally isomeric with a compound of prior art is prima facie obvious absent unexpected results. See In re Finley, 81 U.S.P.Q. 383 (C.C.P.A. 1949); In re Norris, 84 U.S.P.Q. 458 (C.C.P.A. 1950); In re Dillon, 919 F.2d at 696, 16 U.S.P.Q. 2D at 1904 (Fed. Cir. 1990).
